Where to Keep Track of Your Passwords Safely

If you are like most people, you have multiple passwords for your email accounts, bank accounts, online billing, and much more. It is dangerous to use the same password for everything, but how are you to remember them all? We'd like to share a few ideas for ways to store your passwords safely and conveniently (and for FREE):

► Keepass

Keepass is an excellent password manager which is free (for Mac and Linux, KeepassX is available). It only requires you to remember a single master password for all your passwords. It is also available as a portable app for mobile phones

► Roboform

Roboform for Windows is a robust password manager which also helps you easily fill web forms. It provides a browser extension for both IE and Firefox and also comes with a portable version. There is a free version available with limited features.

► LastPass

LastPass has recently added some cool features and could well become the most popular password manager out there. It helps you to create strong passwords, manage them from anywhere and fill in web forms. It works as a browser add-on and also offers to import passwords from other password managers. And it helps you use them on any public computer too.

► Password Hasher

Password Hasher is a nice Firefox extension whose main task is to create strong passwords for you. It is simple to use and uses one master key to generate multiple passwords.
